Can I apply for an aegrotat or compassionate consideration for my written (term time) test?

Yes, if you miss a test or your performance and/or your preparation is impaired during the test due to a medical condition or other unforeseen circumstances outside of your control then you can apply for an aegrotat or compassionate consideration for the test.

Note that written test applications cannot yet be made online and must be submitted in hard copy.

Although similar medical or compassionate evidence and criteria apply the process is slightly different in that the final decision and communication regarding your application will come from your department rather than from the Senate.

- You must apply for each test individually at University Health within 7 days of the individual test date.
- There is a $10 application fee for written test applications.
- The examinations office oversees the initial stage of the process and is responsible for registering all applications and advising students in cases where there is a decline on medical grounds.
- The University Medical and Counselling Advisers are responsible for assessing all evidence and applications to ensure the requirements for applying are met and that all students are treated equitably.
- If the medical or other evidence is insufficient, a letter will be sent informing you that your application has been declined.
- If the evidence is sufficient, the Examinations Office will forward the application to the relevant department for consideration. The department will then become responsible for the application and will advise you of the outcome of the application directly (normally within 21 days of the test).
- Please ensure that you have read and understood the procedures for aegrotat and compassionate consideration before downloading application forms.

For forms and more information, see Aegrotat or compassionate applications for written tests.

For information on aegrotat or compassionate applications for final exams, see Aegrotat and compassionate consideration.