Tribute: John Buckles
I was sorry to learn of the passing of John Buckles. Although I have not had contact with John for some years, I have fond memories of our time together as apprentices with Timothy Whites and Taylors in Preston, in the early 1950s. John was the senior apprentice who acted as the ‘deputy apprentice master’. Even then, his abilities as a teacher came through. I well remember how he guided me, as a very raw recruit, through the complexities of the apothecaries’ system of weights and measures...

The most innovative cancer drugs take longest to reach patients, study suggests
The most innovative new cancer drugs are taking longer to pass through clinical trials, licensing and eventual appraisal by the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence, an analysis carried out by the Institute of Cancer Research has suggested.

Regulator committed to breaking down the profession’s barriers to those with disabilities
I was very sorry to read about the author’s experiences in their blog ‘How the pharmacy profession disregarded me and my disability and why it must change’. The author, who wished to remain anonymous, should not have had to face these barriers during...

Deaths: Eunice Hewitson

NHS England could expand number of minor illnesses covered by pharmacist consultations
NHS England is considering expanding the number of minor illnesses covered by the community pharmacist consultation service, if it is successful, a senior NHS England official has said.

Clinical pipeline of new antibiotics remains small, global report highlights
A quarter of clinical-stage antibiotics are supported by plans to ensure better access and good stewardship after launch compared to 7% in 2018, but the clinical pipeline of antibiotics for priority infections remains small, according to a report published by the Access to Medicine Foundation.

Medicines reconciliation to be an essential service from 2020/2021, says NHS England
Medicines reconciliation could be made an essential service in 2020/2021, following negotiations over the community pharmacy contract, an NHS England official has revealed.

PHE tells patients with suspected coronavirus to call GP or NHS 111
Public Health England says patients concerned about coronavirus symptoms should not present at a community pharmacy, but instead contact NHS 111 or call their GP.

Community pharmacists to offer medicine reviews for patients with mental illness

Some community pharmacists in Greater Manchester are now offering additional support to patients with poor mental health living in the community.

Drug interaction may explain cannabidiol’s effects on severe form of epilepsy

A drug–drug interaction between cannabidiol and clobazam may explain why cannabidiol reduces the frequency of seizures in patients with a severe form of epilepsy, researchers have reported.
